

Hi Twitter World!

I am a young, eager and experienced Product Designer that is looking for a new challenge.

I worked at Credit Suisse for 2 years as a Product Owner/Manager/Designer, and enjoyed my time and responsibilities as I built a Global Tableau Dashboard and an Online Authoring Tool.

However, I've been frustrated by the red-tape, the lack of focus on technology in banking and the ultra-hierarchical structure of the company. I felt many ideas that I had and others in my team never were given a chance to be heard, and that culture really stifled creativity.

I have used Twitter since I was a kid, and over time I have seen it grow and the app develop to the needs of the end user. I want to be a part of a company and a vision that puts the user first.

There are many clichés around user-centered design, but for me, the work means that I am able to build a relationship with someone, and have a common goal, whether it be fixing a current problem, or generating a creative new solution.

For me, being given the chance to help the everyday users of Twitter would be an unbelievably rewarding experience. I have been in an environment where we use internal apps and the clients are also mainly internal, and I want to break free and get a chance in an environment that is evolving and changing so rapidly.

I have 2 years' experience, and I really want to build on that and become an excellent Product Designer, with a strong portfolio that showcases fantastic work, for a big brand like Twitter.

Looking forward to hearing from you!

Sakky